Remembering Dave

Our March 16th Collector's Showcase event is named in honor of David R. Caterino. I would like to tell you a little bit about Dave.

David R. Caterino 1952-1999

Dave would often stop by my office on his way to B-O-C and share his latest finds. It didn't matter if it was a single artifact or the occasional truckload from a local estate; Dave was always searching out the past of our capital city.

Dave's passion was Lansing history.

He openly shared his knowledge and collection of Lansing items with those who expressed an interest. Whether one had a mild or intense interest in Lansing research, he was always ready and willing to assist. It was in this way that I first met Dave so many years ago, and from that first meeting we became close

He was well organized. Each item or collection he acquired was carefully ordered and prepared for archival storage and future research. From memory he was able to recite the ownership or occupants of numerous family residences in the city with great accuracy, or had prepared detailed index cards with such information.

In 1991 Dave published a reprint of Mudge's 1878 City Directory indexing Lansing residents and businesses to make the work easier to use in research. Dave closed his introduction in the reprint with these words: "Researching Lansing History can be difficult at times, but it is the challenge that makes it fun. I hope that you enjoy Lansing history as much as I do."

When the Centennial of Oldsmobile in 1997 neared, the state museum was preparing for a yearlong exhibition titled "Lansing 1897." Dave's friends at the museum contacted him for assistance in providing artifacts for display - the quality and number of which greatly enhanced the exhibition.

During this same time, preparations were underway for a Lansing Sesquicentennial - 150 Years Photograph Book - and when asked to assist, Dave gladly accepted, providing numerous images and historic captions. They say that a picture is worth a thousand words; well, Dave's collection contained thousands of pictures.

In 1998 Dave was diagnosed history was donated to the Local History Room in the lower level of the Capital Area District Library. The ultimate goal is to make the collection available to the public for study and research. The depth of his 3-D artifact collection, photographs, brochures as well as other items number into the thousands. Dave saved the past so future generations of Lansing historians would have the opportunity to look back.

As an active board member of this Society, Dave organized a few 'Collector Showcases' allowing other collectors, including him, the opportunity to display their Lansing related collections for the public. He organized showcases at the Lansing Public Library, The State Museum and at the Turner-Dodge Mansion - It was only fitting that our March 2002 event be named in Dave's honor.

Come share with us on March 16, 2002 in the lower level of the Capital Area District Library. I look forward to seeing you there.

A Call for Nominations

In May, members will elect Officers (President, Vice President, Treasurer and Secretary) and four Trustees for the 2002-2003 year. If you have an active interest in moving the Society forward into the 21st Century, please consider including your name among the nominations. Nominations will be accepted until April 15, 2002 by contacting Society Trustee Jim MacLean at 517.333.9585.

Story of a Crime;

CRUISE OF THE SARAH BERNHARDT

Scene III

There was an able-bodied doubt in our minds whether any other justice in Lansing would issue such a warrant, or any other officer serve it than the one who did. The demands of the officer were that we pay $10 for the boat, and costs, or be taken back to Lansing in chains, as it were. The evident intention of the whole scheme was so strongly apparent that United States talk was again adequate to the occasion.

There was the old battered scow, Sara Bernhardt, with the wood rotting away from the nails that held her bow together; with her side broken and rotting; whose owner we had so diligently searched and inquired for, and which was hardly worth 27 cents. There was the honorable justice, who knew the older members of our party, and knew there was absolutely no call for issuing a warrant - no call for sending an officer to double on his track, except the hope that the party, when found, would pay the demands of the warrant, together with the 10 cent mileage, up and down and back and around, besides other legal expenses, rather than have their trip interrupted.

It was six miles by river to Portland and hardly three across country. With a picked crew, the best boat, and one of the party placed at his disposal, the officer was invited to ride. Possibly it was a dim idea of a watery grave that induced him to let the prisoners go by water, while he marched in military order and battle array by land. We found him drawn up in single file on the left flank of the dam at Portland, and proceeded with him immediately to the train, then about due.

The Honorable Mr. Pinckney was in his shirtsleeves and a chair in from of his temple of justice, with several habitues of the court around him when we presented ourselves. We asked him why he felt called upon to send a warrant after us. "My God!" exclaimed His Honor; "Is it you? If I had known it was you I never would have made out a warrant.'

His Honor inquired if we had had our fun, and if we were ready to come back. On being told that we were not, he told us to go and have our fun, and come back when we got ready; it would be all right. Availing ourselves of this kind permission, in a little over 100 minutes we were in camp on the bluff of the Portland pond, where the rest of the party had a warm fire and hot coffee

In the morning we bought a good, dry, clean boat, with a pair of elegant oars leathered and ironed, for five dollars, to which we transferred our baggage and sent the old tub back to Lansing, when it was placed in the pond, just where it was taken from, and in better order, inasmuch as it was clean, and had a name, ready as of yore for the boys to dive from, to turn over, to fill with mud and water, and float about with whomsoever would go in her.

The Pirates' Cruise

A THRILLING STORY OF PERILS ON THE GRAND

Strange Sights and Peoples - Shooting the Rapids - A Forest Christening Defense of the Farmhouse - The Pirates Baffled

NE of the pleasurable features of a trip like ours, is the anticipation of what we may see around the bend. Therefore Saturday noon found the fleet safely over the Portland dam, ready, eager to get on to pastures new. The river is full of rocks, but there is plenty of water if you are only lucky enough to find the channel. The Looking-glass filters itself through the machinery of mills and the timber of the dam and joins the Grand just where the water begins a swift descent, swirling around big stones which so narrowed and twisted the channel as to make it sufficiently doubtful whether the water or the

Doubtless there are more pleasurably exciting events than shooting the little one-horse rapids of our own Grand river, but the aggregation didn't know of any just then. Our new boat exhibited a perplexing inclination to get onto every rock in the river, therefore, when the fleet gathered at the foot of the rapids, we unanimously broke a bottle, as it were, over her nose, and christened her Sara Bernhart.

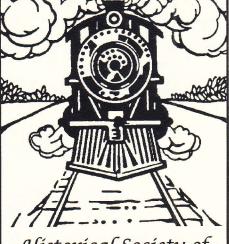

Doubtless, many people think a trip like ours would be dull and monotonous, like heaven "with its high eternal noon." They think of the mosquitoes, of the cramped quarters, and the back-aching work of rowing. But, goodness! they are way off. We were not a silent crowd. Observation and conversation, songs and story filled the day. Don't remember of seeing or hearing a mosquito our entire trip, while on the water. Their absence was so conspicuous that we concluded the whole gang had gone on to our next camping place, to get ready for our reception. Changing about from boat to boat and canoe, afforded variety enough, and there was not an ache reported the entire trip. The hospital was unoccupied.

Our noonday lunch was generally keenly relished, sitting on a grassy bank under the shadow of a few trees, with as much open country about as we could command. What if the ants, the bugs, the worms were a little friendly in their attentions - it's well to cultivate friendly relations, while we have a chance, with those we are bound to be intimate with byeand-bye.

Our two-gallon water demijohn, covered with wicker-work, often gave false impressions - as for instance, at Grand Ledge, a boat-load of good people, passing, saw our demijohn. "O-o-o-o, see their whisky bottle! What a shame!" came in shuddering accents across the narrow interval of water. We recommend future voyagers to label their demijohns in big letters. We always had good water from the springs or wells, at farmhouses. We often bought milk - two, four, or six quarts at a time (our crowd never was weaned). Bread and other eatables were also freely furnished us, save at one farmhouse. Somehow the inhabitants of that house knew the reputation our gang sustained. The doors were closed and barricaded. We were refused even a little salt to keep our speckled trout over night. The chickens were called in, and every portable article nailed to the floor, as it were. "Verily a good name is rather to be chosen than great riches." To be continued ...
